Acknowledgments

This publication is the result of a multi-agency collaboration between different sectors working to prevent and mitigate homelessness in Dundee. We would like to express our gratitude to the various organisations and services in Dundee who have collaborated by sending their information and subsequent updates. This collaboration was essential for the development of the project and to publicise our existence, in terms of what services are available to ensure basic human rights – not just for those who are in a vulnerable situation, but for all citizens of Dundee. We would also like to thank Dundee City Council for the joint work done by the Strategic Commissioning Group for Homelessness, and Shelter Scotland for the partnership towards the creation of a national discussion platform for health and social care integration.

The cover page of this publication is from the project ‘New Routes of Discovery: building confidence and awareness through photography’ that includes photos taken by people experiencing homelessness in Dundee.

Preface

Joe FitzPatrick, Member of Scottish Parliament (MSP)
(Dundee City West)

It is now well understood that for those experiencing homelessness, accessing dental health services and maintaining good oral health can be particularly challenging. The Smile4Life programme sets out to tackle this issue, helping to ensure that those without a home are aware of how to access dental services, as well as maintain basic self-care during these difficult circumstances.

The Smile4Life programme has pointed to the link between oral health and wider social and health needs, particularly in the case of homelessness. The oral health of the population has improved dramatically, though there is still a significant negative impact from poor oral health amongst those affected by homelessness as well as those living in our more disadvantaged communities.

The subsequent development of the Reflexive Mapping Exercise (RME) methodology, led by Dr Andrea Rodriguez from the University of Dundee in partnership with Dundee City Council, has actively engaged with service providers and organisations to encourage a holistic, integrated and co-operative approach to preventing and reducing homelessness. It also aims to tackle the adverse health and social impacts that can be associated with homelessness.

This research by the Dundee Health Services Research Unit (DHSRU), University of Dundee, will provide invaluable insight into the collective strategies and partnerships required to help support those experiencing homelessness in our cities.

The RME will provide a better understanding of the variety of service providers who typically engage with those experiencing homelessness or at risk of becoming homeless, and of how co-operation can be beneficial. I firmly believe this publication will prove to be a vital resource for all those involved in tackling homelessness and its negative health impacts.

Joe FitzPatrick MSP
Foreword

First, I would like to thank Dr Andrea Rodriguez, the lead contributor to this publication, for all the hard work she has put into this.

Andrea, who represents the Smile4Life programme, University of Dundee, is a valuable member of the Strategic Commissioning Group for Homelessness Services in Dundee. This piece of work will contribute greatly to the future planning and improvement of homeless services for each of the eight localities across Dundee.

The research has given great insight into what supports people who find themselves homeless and what we have in terms of services across the city. It has highlighted that most support groups and services are located around central Dundee.

In places where Health and Social Care Partnerships are expected to deliver more support groups in local communities, this report suggests that the distribution of services may need to be spread out more widely in the future. But it is not just the Scottish Government who are saying that services need to be accessible in localities. Homeless people have told us this themselves. Through many consultation exercises over the past few years they have told us time and time again that they find accessing services difficult, particularly at crucial times in life when they are experiencing trauma or crisis. They struggle to attend appointments for many reasons. For example, it may be impossible for them to make phone calls or to access the internet, or they may lack money for transport.

In my role as Senior Officer with the Strategy and Performance Service, I would say that this piece of work is very valuable. It is the first step of our journey to review the distribution of and access to services for homeless people across Dundee.

Hopefully the reflexive mapping exercise will be of use, not just to homeless people but to all the people across Dundee who need the same support.

Introduction

Smile4Life is the Scottish Oral Health Improvement Programme for people experiencing homelessness. It was established in 2007. The first action of the Smile4Life programme was an oral health and psychosocial needs survey, together with a qualitative exploration with people experiencing homelessness in Scotland. This was one of the world’s largest surveys on the oral health and psychosocial needs of homeless people.\(^1\) It produced data on the demographic profile, health and health behaviours, psychosocial health, and degree of patient management complexity of 853 participants. The survey and qualitative findings were used to co-design the Smile4Life Guide for Trainers\(^2\) to support professionals working within the homelessness sector to promote oral health and enable changes to health behaviour.

A key part of the Smile4Life programme was its integration as an oral health promotion programme to be rolled out across all Scottish NHS Boards as well as community and non-governmental organisations (NGOs). The programme aims (i) to translate the Smile4Life research findings into practical changes across health and social services, and (ii) to positively change the experience for people using both health and social services.

One of the key challenges identified by the Smile4Life accompanying evaluation programme\(^3\) was the lack of effective integration between health practitioners and third-sector organisations, and between health and social services. A qualitative exploration suggested that this was often due to a perceived lack of knowledge of available health and social services that provide support to homeless people as well as pathways to referral. To address this issue, Smile4Life started a process of active engagement and dialogue with policy makers and key NGOs that were working to support homeless people and to prevent homelessness. One of the outcomes of these discussions was the development of a reflexive mapping exercise (RME) in four Scottish cities (Dundee, Aberdeen, Glasgow and Edinburgh) in conjunction with NHS Boards, local authorities, universities and Shelter Scotland.

The Public Bodies (Joint Working) (Scotland) Act 2014 requires NHS Boards, third sector organisations and local authorities to integrate the planning and delivery of health and social care services. As specified in this regulation, there will be a full operational plan of responsibilities from April 2016, focusing on improving outcomes and building services through collaboration and integrated approaches. The main aim is to use available resources to improve the wellbeing of people who require support from both the health and the social care sectors.

The current public policy on health and social care integration aims to promote more coordinated access to services which support vulnerable groups, but this is still a challenge in Scotland. Joint work between local authorities, NHS boards and civil society organisations is required to better address communication between these sectors, to avoid restricted referrals and to avoid a limited guarantee of rights for those in need.

The RME provides a practical framework to tackle homelessness by providing an understanding of the current availability of services under eight areas of support, in the context of the design and implementation of health and social care integration. Using a collaborative and multi-agency approach, the RME contributes to increasing accessibility for, and the engagement of, vulnerable users by listing a wide range of services designed for them. This publication will increase awareness of existing services. Through a collective process, it will provide opportunities for both practitioners and service users to better communicate and integrate their services.

We present this publication of the mapping process of services in Dundee City as part of the Dundee City Council local strategic plan to tackle homelessness (2016–2021).

Overview and summary of contents

This document provides a catalogue of available services to support vulnerable groups in Dundee. It also provides evidence of the inequitable distribution of services by social deprivation and geographical distribution.

[1] Contents of the document

The reflexive mapping exercise for Dundee is divided into eight areas of support as seen in Figure 1. These services are:

- Health and psychosocial wellbeing (50 services)
- Education and training (26 services)
- Housing support (19 services)
- Food assistance (20 services)
- Information and advice (29 services)
- Employment and work placement (4 services)
- Furniture (3 services)
- Community development and networking (2 services)

The final number for each category of support reflects only the main services offered by the organisations included in this mapping and not additional services they may offer (such as a food bank service that also offers information and advice). Services operating in more than one location have been considered individually.

Each section of this document contains detailed information on each type of service, as mentioned above.

If available, the following information about the named services has been included:

- Name of the organisation
- Name of the service
- Contact information
- Aim or mission of the service or organisation
- Services provided
- Projects
- Target group(s)
- Area of intervention
[2] Inequitable distribution of services

Figure 2 shows the geographical distribution of health and social services across Dundee. The services are concentrated in the central area of the city, away from areas of high social deprivation. According to the Primary Health Care Approach, this inequitable distribution will reduce access and users’ ability to attend health and social care appointments, since these services are outside a 5 km radius of their residences.

Looking at the Scottish Index of Multiple Deprivation (SIMD), Dundee City has 188 data zones in total. Twenty-one of these are located in the top 5% of deprived areas in Scotland, where 11% of the Dundee City population lives.

Using this tool, we aimed to identify the services under our eight areas of support that were in the top 5% of deprived areas in Scotland to determine gaps in service availability. Figures 3 and 4 show the top 5% of deprived areas in Dundee, based on the SIMD 16 ranks, and distribution of services in these areas.

*The Scottish Index of Multiple Deprivation (SIMD) is the Scottish Government’s official tool for identifying places in Scotland suffering from deprivation. The SIMD divides Scotland into 6,976 small areas called data zones with roughly an equal population in each data zone (500 and 1,000 household residents).
In conclusion, there is an inequitable distribution of services for those residing in the top 5% of deprived areas in Dundee. Our results show there is a lack of services to support homeless people in these most deprived areas of Dundee. The people who live in these areas are the most likely to experience conditions which limit their opportunities in life and their capacity to access available health and social care services.
The RME is not yet finished but is always under construction, and always responsive to the needs of individuals and their communities. There was no intention to produce a complete catalogue covering all services in Dundee. The RME is guided by a principle of constant development as new demands from practitioners, service users, communities and the government arise. You will find blank spaces at the end of each category of support to allow practitioners to add new and further relevant information for specific services. The expectation is that the data collected will advise future work programmes, and inform new policies and interventions to improve quality of life and access to services for the population in Dundee. Following the publication of the RME Dundee, there are two other reflexive mapping exercises in progress in Aberdeen and Edinburgh.

The RME has enabled us to know who we are, what we do and what we want, as well as to initiate a process to achieve better linkage of professionals and service users with key available services. The data presented here provides relevant information for local authorities and government agencies to identify gaps in service provision and inequitable distribution of services. This can help them plan their interventions to mitigate and to prevent homelessness. We hope this RME will be used by all people and groups who believe in, and support the promotion of, social justice. Achieving this involves the public, diverse professionals and other stakeholders working together to shape future plans for the city.

1. Faith in Community Dundee (FiCD)

It encourages the strengthening of connections and, where appropriate, collaborative working.
Faith in Community Dundee offers groups:

- help in identifying needs in the community
- assistance with strategic and action planning
- support in becoming constituted and in governance

- provision of training, and organising events on specific issues.

Projects

- Dundee Drop-In (DDI) Survey: DDI is a group of church-based projects involved in crisis intervention providing food, information and a safe place to socialise for those who are often on the margins of communities in Dundee.

- Working for Fairness: Along with a range of people and organisations, this aims to support people in poverty to articulate what poverty means today and challenge our society, which has seen increasing inequality over the past few decades.

- Faith in Throughcare: One of the issues that concerns many people in Dundee is the high level of re-offending among former prisoners. One of the reasons suggested for this is the lack of support for those coming out of prison from sentences of less than four years. To help address this issue, Faith in Community Scotland has developed Faith in Throughcare along with local communities. This is a model that uses trained volunteers, some of whom may have been in prison, to support those coming out of prison and help them settle in local communities.
